Kappa Kappa Gamma Spreads Sisterhood Throughout College Campus and Town

STATESBORO, GA., February 13, 2026- Georgia Southern University's Zeta Upsilon chapter of Kappa Kappa Gamma Sorority serves the campus's female population by implementing its belief in women's empowerment. With a focus on tradition, leadership, academics, and friendship, the women involved learn the importance of being part of Greek life. The chapter also emphasizes its mission to create lifelong bonds within the sorority, valuing tradition and keeping the secrecy of the chapter's practices. Kappa Kappa Gamma's involvement in Statesboro and on campus exemplifies their values and solidifies their commitment to service.

"It helps people find lifetime friendships, foster learning experiences, help out in the community and have a space where they can act as themselves," said Miriam Cousins, representative of Kappa Kappa Gamma. "They do a lot with the community and a lot for the girls." The sorority often contributes to Esther's Place, a local women's shelter that provides resources to mothers who are domestic violence survivors, homeless or have a weak support system. The chapter aims' to boost confidence and attitudes through the service and mentorship.

About Kappa Kappa Gamma

“We are a women's organization thriving on tradition, leadership, academics, and friendship. Our sisterhood is more than the three letters we wear. It is friendships that will last a lifetime, an opportunity to make a difference at Georgia Southern and in the Statesboro community, a learning experience, and the chance to be a part of something bigger than yourself. Kappa Kappa Gamma was established in 1870 in Monmouth, Illinois and now has a total membership of over 260,000 women, 140 Collegiate chapters in the United States and Canada, and 307 alumnae associations worldwide. “
